

Generous Briton Public House (Ref:003)

Previously a private cottage dating from the 1700's on what was then Pingle Road or Close, and now Garden Street, the Generous Briton began life as a beer house around 1870 with landlord William Smith, a carpenter and machine maker. A beer house, or alehouse, meant he was only licensed to sell those particular brews, which were usually made on the premises. A relative by the name of Alfred Wright, a former framework knitter, took over the lease about 1883, followed by Edwin Marshall circa 1912 to 1928, then Sydney Pegg until 1941.

The photograph (top left) was taken during the latter's tenancy. The figure in the foreground is reported to be one of the Toon's who had a hosiery framework knitting business in Garden Street. Various other landlords followed, still remaining today as a small, friendly village pub.
